ABSTRACT

This bibliography of literature from the 1970s related to crises, family stress, coping, and adaptation contains references of particular interest to professionals in the areas of counseling, education, and family social, psychological and health services. The bibliography is divided into 26 categories; references are classified according to major themes as well as publication date and related reference sources. References in other categories focus on such areas as: theory, crises, stressors, sexuality, developmental crises, coping, parenthood, pregnancy, children, children with disabilities, mid-life crises, divorce, women, aging, illness, death, childhood death, widowhood, violence, rape, suicide, substance abuse, mental illness, and crises in specific situations or with specific populations. BIBLIOGRAPHY OF SELECTED LITERATURE APPEARING IN THE 1970s RELATED TO CRISES, FAMILY STRESS, COPING AND ADAPTATION:

Professional literature regarding crises, family stress, coping and adaptation has experienced a literal explosion during the last few years. This literature search is an attempt to bring together selected references on this broad topic appearing during the 1970s. References have been selected which may be of particular interest to professionals in the areas of counseling, education, and family social, psychological and health services.

This literature search includes articles based on empirical research as well as other references pertaining to crises, stress, coping and adaptation. Over 50 professional colleagues were contacted, and many responded generously to the request to suggest references they had used and/or felt made a significant contribution to this broad topic. Major journals were reviewed, and computed searches were carried out. In addition, appropriate references of abstracts were examined. The attempt to assess the quality of the literature cited was based on subjective judgment.

Limited space prohibits including the many references that appeared before the 1970s. However, certain important references appearing before that time should be recognized, for they offered valuable direction in later research and publications. One category in this literature search, therefore, lists some of these important references appearing before 1970.

Limited space also prohibits including many references appearing in the 1970s that may well be quite valuable. In addition, no attempt was made to cite relevant articles published in languages other than English.

Selecting articles on crises, stress, coping and adaptation published in English proved to be an enormous enough task without expanding the search into other languages.

Some of the topics have many more references than others. For example, the category on death and bereavement is quite lengthy. This copious number of publications reflects the active interest in this topic during the 1970s. The length, in fact, could easily have been doubled, but many references which were listed in category XXV include references appearing prior to 1970. Bibliographies were not included in the topical categories.

An attempt was made to classify references according to their major themes. Many references could have been appropriately listed in other categories. In order to include as many selected references as possible in the limited space, each reference is listed in only one category. There are 26 categories. The 25th category covers important references published before 1970. The last category includes a separate listing of other bibliographies or literature searches. The categories are as follows:

I.	Theory	4
II.	Crises and Stress	7
III.	Stressors	14
IV.	Sexuality	19
V.	Developmental Crises	21
VI.	Coping and/or Adapting	24
VII.	Parenthood	45
VIII.	Adult and Adolescent Pregnancy	47
IX.	Children	49
X.	Children with Disabilities	54

XI. Mid-life Crises 56

XII. Separation and Divorce 58

XIII. Women 61

XIV. Aging 65

XV. Illness, Accidents, Hospitalization 67

XVI. Death and Bereavement 72

XVII. Childhood Death and Dying 79

XVIII. Widowhood 82

XIX. Violence 84

XX. Rape 88

XXI. Suicide 90

XXII. Drug/Alcohol Abuse 92

XXIII. Mental Illness 95

XXIV. Crises in Other Specific Situations and/or with Specific Populations 99

XXV. Selected References Prior to 1970 104

XXVI. Bibliographies 107

This literature search is comprehensive but not complete by any means. Undoubtedly, significant references have been overlooked. Suggestions for improvement of coverage or treatment are warmly welcomed.
